July 2002

Before there were docents...

The summer of 2002 will see a bumper crop of newly trained docent volunteers coming on board to serve both the visitors and the resource at Torrey Pines State Reserve. Of the 65 individuals who registered, more than 40 finished the classroom curriculum coordinated by Training Officer Don Grine and are now completing qualifications that will entitle them to wear the coveted Torrey Pines Docent Society badge and T-shirt. Some of the new trainees have chosen not to become docents, but will work under the direction of Ranger Gary Olson in the "Volunteers in the Parks" program, working as many or as few hours as their lifestyles permit.

"Bouquets, Parts I and II," written by Joan Nimick and published in the March and May Torreyanas, recognized long-time docents for their contributions to Torrey Pines, made me curious about our history. What did it take to build the Torrey Pines Docent Society we take for granted, today? I began my research with phone calls to docents who were in the first class, spring of 1975. Julie Marine, who still lives in Del Mar Heights, waxes animatedly about her early years in Torrey Pines. Melba Kooyman has captivating stories relating to her days as a Lodge Sitter. Perhaps she will share them with us at a future general membership meeting. When I called Judy Schulman, TPDS resident historian and graduate of the 1977 docent training class, she suggested I look for a retrospective written by former Torreyana editor John Carson. Thanks to a mostly intact index, I quickly found the article in the March 1995 Torreyana. This comprehensive well-written article appears on page three, unabridged. I thank John for researching and writing such an engaging account of our "ancestors." (John Carson moved to Santa Barbara about the same time Marty Bressler badged me in 1999.)

The Torrey Pines Association, referred to in John's piece, was founded by Guy Fleming ca 1950. According to Judy Schulman's history, as posted on our WebPages, TPA's "purpose was to unite people interested in the protection of the tree. The Association was, and still is, involved in conservation of the Torrey pine and in serving as watchdogs of the area. Today they are known for their work in the acquisition of the Extension, lobbying for protection of the tree, supporting special projects for the welfare of the tree, providing funds for the enhancement of buildings and trails, supporting the purchase and maintenance of educational materials and furnishings, providing memorial gifts, and sponsoring publications concerning the Reserve."

On the occasion of our 25th anniversary, then Supervising Ranger Bob Wohl told the class of 2000 -- "The Torrey Pines docents have always been considered a special breed amongst all the other state park volunteer groups....The diversity of ages and lifestyles, of personal interests and careers, has given our society a range of experience and knowledge found in very few visitor centers today....Volunteers here make you feel at home."

"Wear your badge proudly, Docent."

WANTED: REFRESHMENT HOSTS

After many years of coordinating the refreshments for our membership meetings, Jane and Bob Talbert would like a break. We need a few good docents to work as a team to make sure the monthly goodies keep coming! If you can help, please call Georgette before the July meeting. And, many thanks to Bob and Jane Talbert for keeping us well provisioned over the years.

Changing pines...

The sanctuary of Torrey Pines for the noble forest of Lodgepole and Jeffrey pines

Southern California beaches for Northern California mountains and meadows

Busy freeways for skies busy with clouds

Trail patrol in winter weekday stillness listening to dolphin exhale just at the surfline

Keeping the fire going at the Ranger residence for seven years, feeling Guy Fleming's caretaker presence

Always opportunities, school interpretative programs, college career days, Trans County Trail Planning Committee, the Accessibility Program, and being a part of an excellent public safety program

My greatest blessing at San Diego Coast District is knowing all of you, fellow employees and volunteers, alike. Thank you for your friendship and what you have taught me

One of the things I'm not much good at is good-byes, -- Rather, I'll say, "Let's be in touch, come visit, and God bless"

Ranger Greg Hackett

At the June membership meeting, Greg announced he would be leaving us in mid-July for a new assignment in the Lake Tahoe area. Greg will be the Supervising Ranger at Donner Lake and Plumas-Eureka State Parks. We wish him the best, but will miss his cheerful smile and long-term dedication to preserving Torrey Pines.

That looks like an invitation in the last line. Who wants to plan the TPDS field trip to Lake Tahoe? L.M.

In the Beginning...

(Reprint from Torreyana, March 1995)

Most members are vaguely aware that there was a volunteer group at the Reserve prior to the Docent Society. But how did the earlier group begin, what did it do, and how did the current Docent group start? Since there does not appear to be an organized written account of this period, finding historical information turned into a long search, with some surprising results.

In the beginning, there was the Torrey Pines Wildlife Association (TPWA)- During the early 60s, some residents in the Del Mar Terrace area became concerned about the deteriorating condition of the Los Peñasquitos Lagoon and the imminent loss of Torrey pines in their area through development. So they formed the TPWA to publicize these situations and act as a public advocate. When the Extension campaign started TPWA and TPA coordinated their efforts in raising funds.

The Lodge Sitters - The Lodge was closed to visitors after transfer of the Park to the State Park System. TPWA members thought this was a loss to the public and eventually arranged with the Reserve staff to have the Lodge open with TPWA volunteers as hosts. Jessie LaGrange (still a TPA member) and Muriel Knight of the TPWA organized a group of about two dozen members for the Lodge program, which started in April '68. The Lodge was open from noon to 4 PM on weekends and 10 AM to 4 PM on special holidays, with the members on 2-hour shifts. According to Melba Kooyman, the only TPWA member now in the Society, this group referred to themselves as Lodge Volunteers, but somehow later on the name of Lodge Sitters became associated with them.

Lodge Sitter Activities - The volunteers, with ranger assistance, set up display cases, added lights, and in general tried to create a museum atmosphere. Two volunteers who provided historical perspectives were Peggy Fleming (wife of Guy Fleming) and Mary Whitaker (wife of Thomas Whitaker). In response to visitor interest, the volunteers arranged for occasional walks for the public led by knowledgeable people from the local schools and Natural History Museum (and sometimes a TPWA member led a walk). The group had no specific training for the programs; they brought their personal interests, knowledge, and commitment to these projects.

Torrey Pines Docent Society -

Sometime in the early 70s, a Dept. of Parks and Recreation (DPR) group visited the Reserve to review the volunteer operation. The group had concerns: the Lodge Sitters had no official relationship with DPR, which posed legal liability problems; there was no Park-approved training; and there was insufficient interpretation. Partly as a result of this review, the Reserve staff decided to help organize and train an interpretive group of volunteers, recruited mainly by advertisements in local newspapers. Rangers Linda Engel (now Leyva) and Richard Irwin worked closely with this group. The first name selected for the group is believed to have been the Torrey Pines Docent Society, but other names some members preferred were Torrey Pines Volunteers, Torrey Pines Volunteer Naturalists, and the Torrey Pines Natural History Assoc. The current name won out. There was an arrangement for the Lodge Sitters to join the Docents, but most preferred not to, being uncomfortable with the formal structure, training, and dues requirements. According to Melba Kooyman, only she and one or two others did transfer.

TPWA's last years -- The completion of the Extension acquisition ended the main activity of the group, but it continued monitoring the Lagoon, reviewing environmental impact reports, etc. The group ceased operation about 1984.

Acknowledgments - My thanks to Judy Schulman, Melba Kooyman, and Julie Marine and a special note of appreciation to Jessie LaGrange for the information on the TPWA and Docent Society. John Carson

Rangering today: from nature interpreter to cop

John Muir, founder of the Sierra Club and California's most revered environmentalist, was first to use the term interpretation in reference to the study of natural phenomena. Since then, whole books have been written about "Interpretation" as it relates to our state and national park systems.

Since 1871, when Congress established Yellowstone National Park, national and state parks have been seen as tools to: preserve cultural and historical environments and artifacts; educate and provide healthful recreation opportunities for the general public; conserve natural resources and open space; and, ironically, as in the battle to save Hetch Hetchy, facilitate resource extraction for the Army Corps of Engineers.

By 1916, there were 14 national parks, 21 national monuments, including several in California, under the auspices of the Department of the Interior. According to the official National Parks WebPages, "Without an organization equipped for the purpose, Interior secretaries had been forced to call on the Army to develop and police Yellowstone and the California parks." But, the Army had other fish to fry. Soon the park system, such as it was, had to call on others to help administer and protect a growing body of parks, monuments and reservations. The idea of "interpreting" these resources for visitors led to the hiring of staff from nearby universities and research institutions. But rigorous standards for these interpretive services were not established until the 1950s when the service received a $30,000 grant to study the subject. "Freeman Tilden, a creative thinker and writer on park topics, embarked on the project...[resulting in] Interpreting Our Heritage, published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1957." Tilden's book remains the "classic treatise on its subject." Tilden based his recommendations on a set of six principles, one of which seems

central to the work of TPDS Docents today, and sounds very much like something Ranger Bob Wohl tried to teach my Class of '99. "The chief aim of Interpretation is not instruction, but provocation." (Read more about Tilden on the Web at www.nps.gov)

So, when did park "interpreters" start looking less like forest rangers and more like soldiers, packing guns and other hardware essential to enforcing the law? In a recent interview with District Superintendent John Quirk, I asked that question. When Quirk began his DPR service in '78, rangers were already trained in law enforcement, but carrying a gun was not an option for "Park Aide" Quirk, who laughs as he talks about his first summer "under an umbrella collecting fees at Torrey Pines North Beach Parking Lot." It was not quite what he expected. Ranger Ken Smith, who was the supervising ranger at TPSR in the early seventies, claims it was the anti-war protesters who brought about a major change in the park culture. Massive gatherings of flower children and hippie wannabes spaced-out on mind-altering drugs made the parks more dangerous for the rangers, as well as those looking for a more benign nature experience...like taking a hike, or a guided walk. This was a particular problem in the large, remote park settings where local sheriffs didn't have the resources to keep the peace beyond their jurisdictions, according to Quirk. Ironic, isn't it? It was the "peaceniks" who brought the guns back into our state and national parks.

[California Park Rangers receive the same law enforcement training as the CHP and county sheriffs at the William Penn Mott, Jr. Training Center, Asilomar State Beach. In fact, Quirk is sitting in for Superintendent Ronilee Clark, while she completes her six-month training in Pacific Grove this summer.]

Nevertheless, the demands on ranger staff for policing these large rowdy groups on the beaches and trails created an opening for more park volunteers, said Smith, who worked with TPWA interpreters and Lodge Sitters during his tenure at TPSR. In 1974, Jack Snavelly, local high school biology teacher on sabbatical, worked with Smith and Ranger Linda Engel to create the first teaching curriculum at Torrey Pines. Snavelly still lives down the street from me in Del Mar Heights, but Smith retired to Corvallis, Montana, a few years ago.

During his early ranger days, Quirk raised his family in a "little house on the prairie in the Redwoods," and (obviously) loved it. He bristles a little when I quiz him about "dysfunctional DPR family" references made by rangers on their way to early retirement. Quirk says, "depending upon where you are in the park system, that family culture still exists." But admits that maintaining the family feeling in urban parks where everything is "fast paced" is harder than it is for those living in the more rural parts of the state system. Quirk says, "the feeling in any particular park is dependent upon the larger culture around you." According to him, a major DPR shift came in the 80's with collective bargaining. "When the rangers became part of a union, that's where we began to see more focus on the peace officer side of the profession than the resource management side."

Still, according to Quirk, California built its program on the national park model. "We are people people," he says. Today, DPR rangers are called upon to manage more people -- visitors, staff and volunteers -- as well as the natural resource, with an operating budget that is shrinking as I write. Ask TPSR Supervising Ranger Allyn Kaye if it's a challenge to stretch a budget and staff to cover the many needs of a beach park and nature reserve that are being loved to death by an adoring, if sometimes thoughtless, public. The need for volunteers in the parks is greater than ever before.

Here in TPSR, rangers and docents have partnered to meet the needs of the resource and the public for more than forty years. L.M.

Next Membership Meeting – July 20th -- 9 AM

Program Coordinator Mary Knox Weir has arranged for a presentation by Therese Muranaka, the new southern district archeologist assigned to TPSR. Please welcome Therese and learn more about TPSR history. In August, Doug Lappi, Vice President of TPA, will lead us in a discussion on his favorite TPSR subject – the Flintkote Trail. Doug wrote the TPA “Tidings” article in May’s Torreyana.

If you drive to the meeting, please carpool and park on the west side of the Lodge road south of the restrooms. Bring something to share at break time and, of course, bring your own reusable beverage cup. See you there!

Docent News from the San Diego County Fair (formerly the Del Mar Fair). Congratulations to David Rightmer for having eight photos accepted in the heavily juried Photography Show. He got two awards and two of his photos are from Torrey Pines State Reserve! Look in the Gem and Mineral Show for Joanne Miale's jewelry designs. Joanne has three individual pieces and two half-case displays. She received awards including two pieces featuring Torrey Pines. The Fair continues through July 7, so stop by and see their work.

Native plant nursery recommended by new docent Joyce Wangerin

It's on Ortega Hwy, exactly 7 3/4 miles East of Interstate 5 on the left (the sign is not oversized, so I highly recommend the mileage check method). They are open to the public on Fridays until 4 p.m. Tree of Life Nursery, 33201 Ortega Highway, San Juan Capistrano, CA 92693
949-728-0685, FAX 949-728-0509
They also carry a lot of books about native plants and information from and about the "California Native Plant Society".

Attention Docents: Vernie McGowan reminds us -- when on desk duty at the Lodge, remember there are always a few extra current Torreyanas or Torrey Pinecones in the blue hanging file in the large bottom left-hand drawer at the front desk. Please give these to folks who seem interested in volunteering at the Reserve. If folks can't wait for the next docent training session, refer them to Ranger Gary Olson for volunteer opportunities now.

Congratulations New Docents!

Training Officer Don Grine tells us that nine trainees have finished their qualifications and will be badged at a future meeting: Ken King, Rustin Holec, Suzan Hohman, Bobbi Whitby, Paul Whitby, Barbara Sullivan, Joyce Wangerin, Victoria Schaffer and Leigh Rhett.

To all members and volunteers with Internet access: I need your feedback! Please use the link on the Torrey Pine website to look at my map brochure for the Reserve. The descriptions were provided by Don Grine and other docent volunteers and I designed the maps. Please send your comments by e-mail to the address located at the bottom of the main page of the map brochure. I will try to respond to any questions within a week or at the next monthly meeting. Thank you, John Bennett.

Recipe for Rosy Hotdogs/Meatballs adapted from a 1960s recipe by Peg Bracken

Sauce: 8 oz tomato sauce & 16 oz of whole cranberry sauce
The sauce will cover between one and two and a half pounds of hot dogs (or meatballs). Pour sauce over bite size pieces of hot dogs and simmer on the stove for 25 minutes. A jelly like grape or boysenberry can be substituted for the cranberry. Many of you asked for this recipe after it was served at one of our recent membership meetings.

Excitement on SVR trail patrol: On Monday, June 17th, Cheryle de Witt and I were taking a walk along SVR.

It was a calm, balmy evening. We were walking along, looking for the deer, or even the elusive mountain lion I mentioned in my talk, when I noticed some splashes of white powder on the road. I recognized this as a sign of the Hash House Harriers, a local running group. Suddenly, a large group of runners came by. The group seemed harmless enough until I saw that some were running into the lagoon, south of the Pump Station. Frantically, I tried calling the Lodge, but it was a busy beach evening, so no reply. Cheryle, in TPDS patrol gear, told some of the group that they should not be running into the lagoon as it is a sensitive area. This is a good lesson in how to do Trail Patrol!

We got to the Pump Station, and watched about half the group turn around - probably those who listened to Cheryle. At this point, I told them the lagoon was a "Preserve". One male, wearing an HHH T-shirt, got in my face (at which point I took a photo of him). Then he proceeded, with others, to do a turn around. As he left, he called us "Eco-nazis." Within seconds, a woman, who was running back north up SVR road, decided to moon us - big time. I was shocked, but kept my cool and said "Beautiful," to which she made a rude reply. Oh, well, what an insightful encounter.

Later, we met a couple with a dog off-leash. After advising them that it was not good to have a dog off-leash next to the Preserve, and trying to explain to them that there were nesting birds and deer in the lagoon, the male owner exclaimed that he felt he was okay because his dog was "trained." He also questioned our commenting on his dog being off-leash, since most of the SVR does not fall into park jurisdiction. He was reminded that dogs are supposed to be on-leash at all times within the San Diego City limits.

So, what is the lesson of this story? Expect the unexpected, have your camera ready, be aware that some

Chronicles, (cont. from Page 6) situations could turn nasty and that one should be very careful about talking to those who break the law! The good part of the evening was the discovery that the City has now put a barred gate, similar to the south gate at Torrey Pines, at the south closure of SVR. Diana Gordon.

Hike Carmel Mountain with Diana
Monday, July 1st, 5.30 PM

Directions: From I5, go East on Carmel Valley Road. Go South on El Camino Real, which becomes Carmel Mountain Road. Turn left on East Ocean Air. Go to the end of this street, then left onto Fairport Way. Park in street near intersection with Shorepointe. There is a barred gate in front of a trail leading onto Carmel Mountain. This hike will help you understand why this area is so critical to preserving the wildlife corridor into TPSR. And, you might have an adventure like the one Diana describes above.

Sail On By-The-Wind Sailors

by Robyn Bianco

Were you lucky enough to see the little deep-blue creatures known as hydroids or by-the-wind sailors, distant cousins of the Portuguese man-of-war, that washed up on the Torrey Pines shoreline along with red crustaceans during the second week of May?

After the children's program on May 8th, Barbara Wallach told a few of the docents of her amazing find. On her early morning beach walk, the shore seemed to be carpeted with tiny red "crabs" (actually galatheid). Apparently these tropical crustaceans had been carried from the coast of Baja by unusually warm ocean currents. Along with the "crabs," Barbara saw these very cute jellyfish-like creatures. Anita Musser identified them as by-the-wind sailors. Barbara offered to lead us on a beach hike and, not wanting to miss a rare opportunity to observe life from the "high seas," I followed her down the Lodge road and on to the beach.

As we walked south towards Flat Rock, the shoreline took on an unusual sheen with the reflection of gelatinous bodies with cellophane-like fins looking like little sailboats. Formerly known as Velella velella, these hydroids had found their unfortunate mooring as a result of prolonged southerly winds. Skilled "sailors" tack to the left and are blown away from shore: during spring months, strong winds cause them to spin around rapidly and follow the wind tacking at a much closer angle. Even the strongest of by-the-wind sailors can be cast ashore.

The excitement felt by this amazing discovery was paired with the sadness of knowing they were dying and would soon decompose. Their little internal skeletons would be floating away on the ocean breeze. I later learned that the nematocysts, or stinging "cells", are not powerful enough to penetrate human skin.

As we reached Flat Rock, we took a second to reflect on just one more wondrous Torrey Pines moment before Margaret Fillius and I headed up the beach trail and Barbara returned along the beach.

"Other" Torrey trees

by Don Grine

John Torrey has several trees named after him in addition to Pinus torreyana. A genus with five closely related species in North America and eastern Asia is named Torreya. In California we have Torreya californica, the California Nutmeg, in the canyons of the northern Coast Ranges and on the western slope of the Sierras. It is an evergreen gymnosperm with needles, not in bundles like a pine, but in two rows along twigs. The fruit is one to 1.75 inches long with a single woody seed covered by a thin fleshy envelope, like a real nutmeg. In Florida, the Torreya taxifolia (the Florida Torrey), looks much like the California Nutmeg. The crushed needles and twigs have a strong odor similar to that of tomato leaves.

The yellowish wood is also aromatic. A common name for the tree is "stinking cedar." The Florida tree is rare and has a very restricted range: it is protected under the U. S. Endangered Species Act. Torrey State Park, near Bristol, Florida, is named for the tree which occurs only on the bluffs of the Apalachicola River. At the Park, visitors are told that the tree grows only there, in California, and in China. During a special walk at the TPSR for the Colonial Dames of America, Mrs. Charlotte Scherman told me that she thought that the Torrey pine grew naturally in Florida. She checked it by a visit to the Florida Park and found that old Torrey had several trees named after him. She would make a good Docent!

Gourd-decorating Workshop

Don't forget the July 13 workshop led by Barbara Wallach and Judy Schulman. Activities begin at 9 AM, sharp. Gourds make wonderful gifts! Bring your imagination, along with a large needle, scissors, marking pens, and a bag lunch.

Superintendent's Message: Bad News, Good News

A common superstition holds that bad luck events come in threes. First, the bad news.

The State of California operates on a fiscal year ending on June 30th. This fiscal year has been difficult financially for State Parks, and for our San Diego Coast District in particular. Given California's twenty-four billion dollar deficit, next year will be no better, and quite possibly much worse for our local State parks.

It has also been a difficult year locally because we have recently undergone a transition of top-level park management. And now, due to an extended training assignment for our new District Superintendent Ronilee Clark, I have been assigned to lead us through the next several months.

Come this October, because of the idiosyncrasies of collective bargaining and retirement formulas, State Parks will face an unprecedented mass retirement of rangers, lifeguards and park superintendents.

A seriously troubled economy, the unsettling effects of a transitional management, and critical staffing shortages... Now, the good news.

Torrey Pines State Reserve, the staff, the volunteers, Torrey Pines Docent Society, Torrey Pines Association, visitors, and the neighboring community are steadfastly and resolutely determined to see that this thoroughly unique and most wondrous place will survive and thrive for the health and well-being of our grandchildren's grandchildren.

The persistent troubles that consume so much of the time and energy of park managers, such as myself, have the side effect of sometimes creating a communication vacuum. In writing this message I am hoping to fill this void and dispel the rumors and fears occupying the space.

One fear I have heard concerns the Torrey Pines Docent Society contract with State Parks. There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that this partnership is in jeopardy. We need each other more than ever before to accomplish our collective mission. In particular I cannot say enough about the tremendous and profound job the docents are doing by reaching out to children and adults through our well-organized education/interpretive programs.

Another fear I have heard involves intellectual property rights. It is unfortunate that the legalistic, proprietary language contained in the State Volunteer Service Agreement has troubled some of our valued and most creative volunteers. I urge anyone who has personal concerns with this document to call me, so we can craft language specific to individual intellectual property rights. This should provide individuals the same protections that State Parks is seeking for its properties.

So, I would come back to communication. Call me. Write me. Speak your concerns to staff, and those members of the Torrey Pines Docent Society and the Torrey Pines Association who know me. And please, do not ever give up fighting for the protection of this jewel of the California Coast, and against all the multitudinous, deleterious, external threats that are ever-present and requiring our constant vigilance.

Torrey Pines Reserve

by Morgan (John) Spiess

Between suburbia and the sea,
There isn't much left that's wild and free.
Very few places look the same,
As they did before the developers came.

Between here and Los Angeles, there's hardly a spot
That hasn't turned into a parking lot.
Barely a trace is left of the past,
And what little there is, it's fading quite fast.

Yet there is one place where you still can see,
Some space that looks like it used to be.
Not far from the freeway, overlooking the ocean,
An oasis of sorts, amidst all the commotion.

It's almost an island, apart from the fray,
Where things seem clearer, from farther away.
A true sanctuary, both quiet and holy,
Where time hasn't stopped, but it moves much more slowly.

We went there a lot, when I was a kid,
And today it still looks pretty much as it did.
It seemed no big deal, a hill quite like the rest,
None of us dreamed there'd be North
City West.

But today, looking back, it's a good thing they saved,
Those few acres of trees, before it got paved.
Because once it's gone, there's no way to borrow,
A bit of the past, to keep for tomorrow.

Ranger Hackett read this poem at the June TPDS meeting, saying he'd had it taped to his locker through all the years he's been assigned here. According to Sally Spiess, her son wrote the poem sometime during a campaign to save the Extension lands. Morgan was born in 1951 and graduated from La Jolla High School. L.M.
